Angelo's Use of Hickory Water Alarms Brady Folks

In a letter to the editor of the San Angelo Standard Times, Ken Bull, president of the McCulloch County Property Owners Association, gave some reasons why the citizens of McCulloch County protest the opening of water wells for San Angelo in McCulloch County, especially in the western portion.

The City of San Angelo filed suit against the Hickory Underground Water Conservation District seeking to open the wells in the western portions of McCulloch County.

"The Hickory Underground Water District can not say no to San Angelo, but CAN say how many and how much," T. Flemming, Brady's acting city manager, said Wednesday.

Flemming said that there was to be an open meeting Thursday, May 25, at the San Angelo Convention Center, beginning at 7 p. m. and that he felt people in McCulloch County and especially Brady, needed to be present and speak their mind.

"I am not speaking as a City employee, but as a concerned citizen," Flemming emphasized. In his letter to the editor, Bull explained that several years ago San Angelo purchased the right to access water in the Hickory Aquifer beneath certain properties in McCulloch County.

"The Ivie Reservoir had not been built at that time and the purchase was understandable," Bull noted.

"Now that San Angelo has access to the Ivie water through the pipeline, it is difficult to understand why they would pursue further the development of the Hickory water when the taking of that water would adversely affect properties and people throughout the Hickory Underground Water District," Bull said.

The City of Brady would suffer a significant loss since all of the city's water comes from the aquifer. The Richland Special Utility District serves water to residents throughout eastern McCulloch County, and the cities of Mason and Rochelle also take water," Bull said.

Flemming said "I am concerned because I have seen water right fights in San Antonio, and I don't want to see that in Brady.
